

This is the Memoir of an Ordinary Person.

A memoir that:

- spans from December 2006 to May 2011;
- describes the author's struggle against an "alleged" constructive dismissal by one of Ireland's top law firms;
- tells of the author's challenge to the Employment Appeals Tribunal to remain impartial;
- outlines the author's application to the Legal Aid Board to provide assistance;
- questions the validity of the Courts' Customer Service Strategic Plan, the internal systems and the treatment of people who cannot afford legal counsel; and
- gives an account of the author's challenge to the Law Courts when she self-represented in the Appeal against the Firm.

It is the story of a system which is protected by self-regulation and the separation of powers and which has thrived because of the unwritten Code of Practice.

It is the story of The Judiciary – An Ordinary Person's Perspective
